Over the years, consumers have become more concerned about security while shopping. Shopping at night, crowding at peak hours, and higher crime areas, are all concerns. Retailers have addressed the problem by implementing programs such as enhanced lighting, closed-circuit camera monitoring in stores and parking lots, and increased staffing to improve employee response time.

More recently, grocery stores are bringing on additional private security guards to help control crowds, cashier lines, and clogged parking lots during the health crisis. Many stores have experienced panic buying leading to empty shelves, long lines, and violence at supermarkets. It has become necessary to reorganize and curb aggressive behavior.

A solution for major supermarket chains across the country is increasing security with third-party security solutions. They help with crowd control, directing traffic in parking lots, and general safety, as stores hire more staff and expand operating hours.

JCJ has high-tech temperature scanners to perform touchless temperature checks.

COVID-19 has led to the additional need to regulate or limit the number of people entering a supermarket. JCJ helps manage senior shopping hours, new store entrance and exit patterns, observance of mask requirements, and temperature checks.

The FLIR E75 has the sensitivity to diagnose and find hidden issues, directly or from a distance, using interchangeable lenses. The 320 x 240 resolution offers more than 76,000 points of temperature measurement and vibrant imagery.
